

Federal Policy Internship

Local Initiatives Support Corporation (LISC), the nation's largest community development support organization, seeks an undergraduate student for a summer 2008 internship in its Washington DC based federal policy office. A stipend is available and college credit can be arranged.

Prior exposure to government relations, political campaigns, or the community development industry is helpful. The selected candidate will gain hands on Capitol Hill experience, play an integral role in building a nation-wide campaign to support community development, and develop a working knowledge of housing policy, community development, and related issues. The internship is ideal for a student with career aspirations in government relations or the community development industry.

The candidate should have excellent research skills, be able to effectively communicate findings of that research, and have a solid foundation in Microsoft Office. Specific responsibilities during the internship will include:

- Cover Congressional hearings for LISC and provide notes to Policy Team as assigned
- Prepare and update materials for Capitol Hill visits
- Assist with all phases of preparation for special outreach events, including Congressional staff briefings, luncheons, and industry outreach
- Assist in keeping the mailing lists and Congressional matrices up to date
- Assist on a variety of research projects, including Congressional outreach, Presidential Candidates, and other special topics as assigned

Please email a resume and brief cover letter to:
Stephen Sugg at ssugg@lisc.org.

Applications received by April 15, 2008 will receive preference.

See www.lisc.org for an overview of the organization.
